Towns.

EMPLOYERS FIND IT PAYS

Men and Women Who Have Comfortable Homes Take an Interest in Their Tasks.

Manufacturers and those who have to depend on the effort of others in producing what they seek to sell have been coming into realization that one of the first requisites in any successful business is to have the employees comfortably housed and to make the conditions under which they work as comfortable as the nature of the industry will allow. Experience has shown, employers find, that men and women are better able to perform their daily tasks when they come from homes that are warm, well lighted and suitably equipped.

The man or woman who sleeps in a poorly lighted, poorly heated, poorly ventilated, and poorly surrounding abode is clumsy and dreary, will come to life or her work a weariness that impedes physical labor and renders the mind dull. Officials have learned. Another problem that comes up in the big cities is the finding suitable accommodations for boys and girls staying at night. If their homes are comfortable the problem is much less acute.

A New York woman who has made a special study of social conditions among young people told the women of a neighborhood club where she had gone to consider what was best to do for the young men and women who were on the streets at night would not be there if their home conditions were better or if they had some place where they could meet each other except on the streets. In the textile towns there has been a marked improvement in the housing of mill workers.

In such towns as Lawrence, Mass., land is not so expensive as in the larger cities and the construction of houses for mill hands does not entail the expenditure of a great amount of capital. It is possible to build inexpensive cottages which will have every desired convenience and comfort, and yet will be cheap enough to be rented to any figure or sold on easy terms to permanent employees. Some of these cottages remind one of seashore bungalows. They stand in the centre of well cropped lawns. Each has its roomy cellar and pleasant living room, dining room and kitchen on the main floor with a back porch. The roof is steeply pitched under the eaves of the sloping roofs. Most of them are shingled all over and the shingles are stained. Here is where the taste of the individual operative is shown. Some are content of let the colors stay as they find them, while others stain the exterior of their dwelling a dark green to correspond with the color of the trees that are found in the lot.

In some manufacturing towns, and this is particularly true of the South, mill companies have offered prizes for the best gardens and the largest flowers that will grow in the soil. To go to one of these towns is a delightful experience. One passes by the charming garden spots of flowers and a profusion of shrubs to be seen. The mill hands take great pride in these, and when once their active
